

Daisy Chain: Simba Daha

A mercenary in Africa gets left behind, and with reluctance, slowly accumulates some black children disciples as he trudges his way out of the war zone. They have numerous close-calls, but eventually they escape to sea, and safety. They all illegally enter England, and the family takes up residence in the mercenaries house, but Social Services quickly get the mercenary in their sights, and he gets remanded to prison. The disciples forcefully resist all official efforts to remove them from the mercenaries house, and after a change in personnel, the new social worker arranges for the mercenary prisoner to mediate with the children. The social worker becomes besotted by the mercenary, and facilitates his release. The mercenary moves in with the Social worker, and takes her as his girlfriend, and then as his wife. The two indulge in a heavy relationship, which expands to friends and friends of friends ... Meanwhile the children are simply left to independently run his old house, as an official council childrens home.
