

Janet Cardiff & George Bures Miller: The Murder of Crows

Janet Cardiff and George Bures Millers The Murder of Crows is a surrealistic sound installation inspired in part by Goyas famous etching The Sleep of Reason Produces Monsters. This hallucinatory work depicts a man asleep with owls and bats swooping menacingly around his head; Cardiff and Millers title also refers to the habit among crows of flocking to a dead crow and cawing collectively, often for over a day, in a crow funeral. The installation is composed of 98 speakers that visually mimic the flocking crows and issue both ambient and musical sounds, and a desk (mimicing Goya) with a megaphone from which Cardiffs voice relays a series of dreams. This artists book account of the project--as well as selected earlier projects--includes documents, interviews with the artists, ornithological and literary texts referring to crows, plus a DVD and 3-D reproductions with glasses.
