

Callum Innes & Colm Toibin: Water, Colour

Gallerist Sean Kelly introduced Scottish painter Callum Innes and Irish author Colm Toibin in New York in February 2010. Toibin had been a longtime admirer of Innes serene abstractions and had even acquired one of his watercolors, and he quizzed the painter at length about his work and methods during this initial meeting. Kelly asked Toibin if he would like to write on Innes, and when the acclaimed novelist--who has often written on art--readily consented, Innes decided to embark on a series of new watercolors for the occasion. He got to work immediately upon his return to Edinburgh, and between February and July of that year he produced 64 watercolors. In each of these watercolors, Innes employed two colors, wet on wet, leading to beautiful textured layering effects unlike anything in his oeuvre to date. Toibin, meanwhile, had completed the short story water colour, written specifically for Innes work, which in turn prompted an incredible, concentrated, three-month burst of creativity from the painter, and a further 160 watercolors. Kelly and Innes edited these down to the 101 works that are reproduced in full color in this magnificent volume, alongside Toibin's short story.
