

The Rajah Quilt

One of the worlds most important textiles, the Rajah quilt is a major focus of the National Gallery of Australias textiles collection. The quilt was made by women convicts on board the ship Rajah while being transported from England to Van Diemens Land (Tasmania) in 1841. While it is a compelling document of convict life, it is also an extraordinary work of art?a product of beauty from the hands of many women who, in the most abject circumstances, were able to work together to produce an object of hope.From the moment The Rajah quilt entered the collection of the National Gallery of Australia, its significance was obvious to the textile conservation staff. Part of a longstanding tradition spanning over a millennium, quilts evoke an interest that extends beyond the special place they hold in the history of womens artistic endeavours. They embody technical and decorative skills, patience and, most importantly, an individual story of the time and personality of its creator. The inscription on The Rajah quilt confirms its importance in Australian history as a physical link to transportation and early European settlement. Uniquely, this quilt also holds significance for the thousands of Australians who are descendants of the 179 women prisoners who arrived in Tasmania on board the Rajah in 1841.The publication features details of the quilt showing varying stitching, patchwork bands, broderie perse (a French term used to describe applique patterns comprising cut-out sections of floral motifs from printed chintz imported from India) construction and previously unseen reverse details.
